

ENCENT SELLS FOR SE. Bori Justifies Infatuation of The Three Kings

By Sylvester Rawling.

'AMORE DEL TRE RE," sung at the Metropolitan Opera

Casass is to be congratulated for precenting it to us.

When in the second act the blind old king chokes and smothers his son's wife, in a fary so impassioned that one is stunned rather than shocked, the climax seems to be reached. Yet before the oursian fally there is another thrill when the old man through the limp body across his shoulders and carries it off. Something is left, too, for the third act when lover and husband bott disfress hissing the ligs of the dead wyman that have been poisoned by the cunning old man to discover the leyer he could not see, and the cur-lever he could not see, and the curtains close upon his helpless and hopeless grief and misery.

So much for the drama. The muste is as graphic, Each character sings the emotions of the moment with ainstrict and without the emotions of the mement with aincerity and without reserve. There can be no mistaking his or her meaning or what the orchestra is disclosing in detail of the love, the pastice, the self-amegation, the pastice, the self-amegation, the pastice, the self-amegation, the pastice, the suspicion, the haired and the revenge involved as it sweeps on, enguisagone in a bervent of emotion.

Lucrenta Bert, in better voice than she has been this season, presented a never should do anything cise, although her voice and her presence and her intelligence should carry her far, she has justified her right to a high piace upon the operatic stage by this one memorable impersonation. Amate as Manfreda, the betrayed husband, gave of his best in voice and disclosed the most poetic of his obstracterisations. Ferrari-Fontain was misparable both in voice and in action as Avite, the lover. Didur's Archibaldo, the blind father, jealous for his son's honor and because of his own infatuation, deserves to rank with his Boris. For the rest, Bade, Audialo, Marie Mattfeld, Sophis Braslau and Lila Robsson completed an efficient cast, and Mr. Toccanini confucted with fine ferver and master-fulness.

Caruse was the star of the musicale

Caruse was the star of the musicale at the Biltmore Festerday morning. The intention was that his associates should be Marie Rappold, soprano, and Lampate Godowsky, plasiist; but the latter, who claims, rightly enough, that he is in the front rank of his profession, objected to the subordination of his concert and failed to appear. It was reported last night that the mainager, R. E. Johnston, had brought early against Mr. Godowsky for $35,000 for breach of contract. In Mr. Godowsky's place appeared Germaine Schnitzer, who played effectively compositions by Chopin, Baint-Baens, Staub, Lingt and the Schubert-Taunig "Marche Mill-tairs."

Mr. Carrise is not at his happiest in concert. Besides, no tener absuid be asked to sing before 2 or 3 o'clook
